

DEAD LETTERS

Word play.

2-7 players

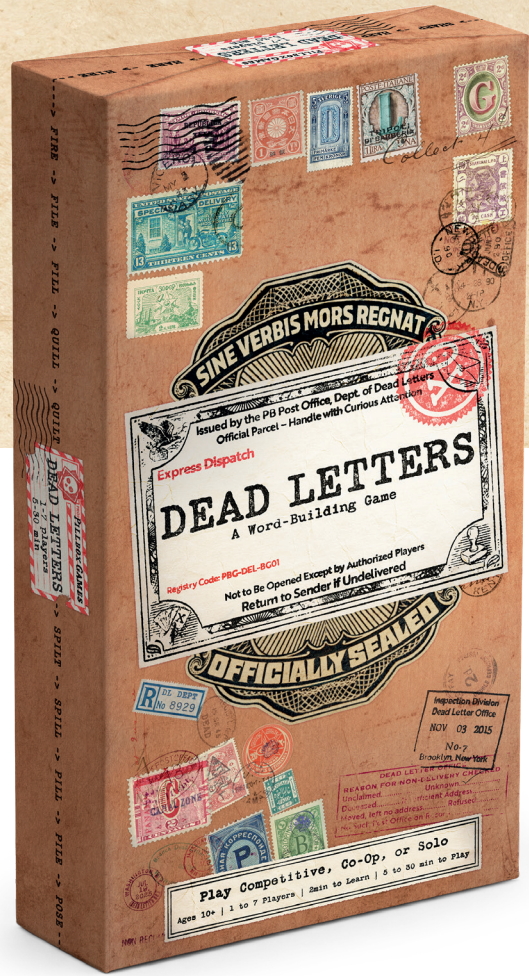

Ages 10+

5 to 30 min to play

The first thought you'll have after finishing a game of Dead Letters is, "I can't believe this was just invented now." It's an instant classic – taking cues from games like Scrabble and Uno but wrapping it all in a gorgeous collection of vintage postage art.

You're dealt 10 cards (each containing one letter) and your goal is to be the first one to shed them all. There's a four-letter word board in the center, and you get rid of cards by taking turns adding letter cards to the board, creating new words in the process. You can also subtract letter stacks that have accumulated on the board if you cannot add any letters from your hand. But every action must leave the center with a valid word. Vowels let you go again and harder-to-use letters (e.g. X, Q, W, etc) grant you special abilities if you can use them. Dead Letters can also be played cooperatively or even solo!

- Games play quickly and are delightfully addictive!
- Vintage "postage punk" style makes this game a work of art
- Expansion packs open up the game to new possibilities
- Perfect for the lit major, bookish gamer, or lover of word
